THE FOURTH SECTION

GENERAL VIEW OF THE AMENDMENT

Here, then, is the broad platform upon which we take our stand. Who is opposed to no historical doctrine that before this amendment is passed the recently sected States shall be fully and in conditionally represented in Congress. The moment this is done by adding their votes to the votes of the Democrats in Congress. You seem more than one third of the Seniors, and thus have to the late robel States, perhaps for all time, the gross and which dinegality of representation which they now possess. All the sacred gray writes of the amendment would thus be atterfy millifed and destroyed. Observe that notwillstanding the President of the United States insists that the South is ready and entitled to misrepresentation, in no one case, have even the conditions be his insisted upon been sin every complied with Cive them the power they are minimized with the recommends and you will soon.
